the 1990s, the number of people who have been employed in the public sector has increased in all countries. The increase has been particularly large in the United States, where the public sector has grown from 10.5% of the total workforce in 1970 to 17.5% in 1995 (see Figure 1).

There are a number of reasons for the increase in public sector employment. One reason is that the public sector has become a more attractive place to work. This is due to a number of factors, including the fact that public sector jobs are often more secure and offer better benefits than private sector jobs. Another reason is that the public sector has become a more important part of the economy, particularly in the areas of health care and education.

There are also a number of reasons for the increase in public sector employment in the United States. One reason is that the federal government has increased its spending on social programs, particularly in the areas of health care and education. Another reason is that state and local governments have also increased their spending on these programs. This has led to a significant increase in the number of public sector employees in the United States.
